

Social and participatory approaches for security innovation

Montag, 15:00 - 15:45 Uhr, Raum 5 (TC-2.11a+2.12)

PhD Laura Llop-Medina

University of Valencia

Abstract

Crowded public spaces present critical security challenges. These challenges, which are increasingly complex in nature, encompass the threats of terrorism, organised crime, political and economic unrest, natural disasters and high-volume gatherings. To improve the understanding of the European security landscape, a scoping review was conducted in the framework of CO-SECUR EU project, with the aim of identifying and synthesising studies that focus on public space and mass events security innovations developed through bottom-up approaches, public participation or targeted public engagement, as well as studies that analyse or research security perception and behaviour. Eligible studies were published in the last decade, spanning peer-reviewed and grey literature in Europe (with focus on Spain, Belgium, Finland, Germany, Portugal, Romania, Poland, Greece, and Lithuania).

Direkt zum Kongressprogramm mit Details zu den Referierenden >>>